BATTLE ON THE CATOCTIN MOUNTAIN. GENERAL MOCLELLAN VICTORIOUS. HEAVY LOSS OF THE ENDMY.

BRINFORCEMENTS SENT FORWARD.

Correspondence of the Baltimore American. PREDERICK, Monday, 2 p. m .- The news that made their words good by acts.

on Naturday drove the rebel rear guard out of Middletown, and our advance halted that night short distance beyond that village. Early on Sunday morning the onward movement was resumed by General McChellan. The rebels were directly in front, and retreated slowly and resolutely, contesting every foot of ground. Up to about two o'clock the engagement was principally with artillery. The rebels placed their batteries on every advantageous position and shelled our navance. Our artillery replied and the fire was at times very heavy, but the advantage, from the higher ground they occu-pied, being with the rebels in this artillery practice, our Generals depended more upon their infantry, and heavy columns were pushed successfully forward, driving the enemy back until about half the ascent of the mountain was gained. In doing this work some splendid dashes were made by our troops, in which Burnside's and Hooker's corps (formerly in line of battle on their chosen position, the engagement at once became general and fierce. The musketry fire, as described to me by officers wounded in the battle and now here, was the most continuous and sustained of the war. It rolled rapidly and fiercely from right to left, nous exchange of ward with an impetus that carried all before it. The Rebels fell back, and endeavored to again bring their disordered columns into line of battle, but in vain. Wildly cheering and determined to win, our lines pushed forward, drove the enemy from point to point, and as the last rays of the sun rilded the mountain, reached the summit. The Pass was won, and the enemy were in rapid and disordered retreat down the slope toward Boonsboro' The pursuit was continued for two miles down the mountain, until darkages le-field, whilst its pickets extended some three miles forward and beyond the little village of Bolivar (not the Bolivar of Harper's Ferry.) The Rebels left their killed and many of their wounded on the battle-field. My informants have no knowledge of the enemy's loss, except where they were engaged, immediately on the right, and can, therefore give no estimate of the general loss on either side. They found the ground over which they passed thickly strewn with rebel dead and wounded. In a corn field where a desperate stand was made, there was marked evidence of the severity with which did better than any one would have ventured to hope. Their enthusiasm made up for their inexperience, and they rivalled their older companions in arms in the steadiness with

of his death, but understand that he was killed by a rifle ball, whilst feeling the position of the enemy on Sunday morning. I hear of the loss of no other of our general officers. As to the loss of line and field officers we have no reports. Loss of THE BNEWY—CAPTURE OF PRISORES. We have the numerous and no doubt ex-travagant rumors here of the loss of the enemy. of Longstreet's Division captured. Tracing these reports as far as I am able I and that Gen. Lee is reported by the prisoners taken as wounded, and some say killed. Gen. Garland, of Virginia, is certainly killed. Of prisoners,

AFFAIRS TO-DAY. Some intermittent artillery firing was heard early this morning, but from the general quiet in front it is evident that no serious battle in progress to-day. The reports are that the Rebels made good use of their heads during the night and that this morning they were in rapid retreat toward the river, rendering it doubtful whether they would be overtaken before they had put the Potomac between themselves and Gen. McClellan. The hope is that Gen. Hein!zelman's corps, being comparatively fresh, will be enabled to push after them and embarrass if not prevent their retreat.

HARPER'S PERRY. Much anxiety is felt here to learn the condition of affairs at Harper's Ferry where it is known Col. Miles is hardly pushed by Stonewall Jackson. Capt, Cole was sent from there on Saturday night to communicate with Gen. McClellan. Through his knowledge of the roads he got safely across the enemy's lines and met Gen. McClellan at Middlelowa on and met Gen. McClellan at Madar to Sunday. His report is (I gather it second hand) that the Rebels on Friday advanced in such force on the Maryland Heights, coming the force of the rear, that our people were forced. up from the rear, that our people were forced o abandon the battery there. The retreat was however done systematically. The runs were spiked and then thrown over the precipies, and the men, most or all, escaped over to the Ferry. Jackson had also possession of Lou-don Heights, the smallness of Col. Miles force rendering it impossible for him to maintain hese detached posts.

On Sunday the Rebels endeavored to place out. If the enemy are aiming, as now seems out. If the enemy are alming, as now seems almost certain, for the fords of the Upper Policemac, he must necessarily abandon his designs upon Harper's Ferry. There are also rumors that Gen. Sigel has gone to the aritance of Col. Miles via Leesburg. Certain it is that Sigel has not been seen this way, and hence at is conjectured that he has been detached upon Frederick is a lively place just now. The main body of the army is away beyond, the last of the long obluma having died out the Hagers, lown road on Funday morning, but there saill remains behind enough to give the city a decidedly military appearance. From the Moscowy Junction shrough the main street of the town, and as far out the Hagerstown road as the eye can reach are two lines of army warons, moving in opposite directions. The one toils slowly out laden with flood for the suldiers and ammunition for their guins. The other comes in to renew the supply. It is emendiess chain of wagons, mules and contrabands. We have a large army out there, and it must be fed. Ool. Allen, of Marna, is provided marshal of the city and good order prevails.

How the War Affects the Trades.

There is great activity in the branches of trade which supply arms, food, slothing and Equipments for our new levies of traces. For instance, all the timmon of this city are so busy with Government contracts for canteens, puns and kettles, that they have suspended work on the articles intended for domestic use. The cap-makers are doing a brick business in army contracts. The arms manufacturers drive their factories day and night to make up the requisite supplies of maskets and revolvers; to say nothing of the ordannes foundries, which are all busy. The leather manufacturers are hard at work on cartridge-boxes, belts and saddles. The clothing-houses have more work on hand than they can finish for months to come, and some of the heavier concerns refuse to take orders from regular customors until the Government contracts shall have been filled. Copper is in demand, and while the percussion can makers have all they can do with the available stock on hand, they still buy up large quantities of metal for future use. Cutters are busy in the manufacture of swords for officers and knives for the scape; the power makers have all they can do with the synday in the manufacture of swords for officers and knives for the scape; the power makers have all they can do not have been falled. knives for the samps; the powder makers have all they our do; and the ship-yards, fires and ment furnishes constant employment to the bank note companies, and hosts of operatives labor face-antly in the various processes of paper making, ink making, engraving and performance, link making, engraving and printing, which go to make up the stock of Treasury paper and Treasury and revenue samps which the enactments of Congress legalize. It is proper to add that the delay in the issue of the new possal currency is attributable to the destruction of the works for the manufacture of the ink which is used in printing it. The patented process under which this tak is made is held by a chemist of this city, whose manufactory was burned a fortnight since.

against the fide part of the distance. The ma-chinery works admirably, and Captain Turner expresses his entire satisfaction with the vessel. On Wednesday, the drew of the Ironsides was transferred to the receiving ship Princeton, preparatory to the vessel being handed to the central pier at the navy yard, which was done on Thursday morning. Her spars are to be put in at once; and as soon as that is done, and some alteration made to the stearing superstant. alteration made to the steering apparatus, she will leave for the South.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, in noticing the arrival of the New Ironsides, says that all hands are satisfied with the working of the vessel and the machinery. Very little jurring is experienced from the engines, the vibrations being scarcely apparent. This is rarely if ever the case in any war vessel. The machinery is up to the expectation of the builders. With sixty revolutions per minute the ressel attains a speed of 71-6 miles per hour. Her contractors say that eighty revolutions per minute can be accomplished. This would increase her speed to at least nine knots per hour. The guns are removed from the ports and piced as nearly as possible in the center of the wisel, and are properly fastened, so that no motion or rolling can loosen them. The vessel has two wheels, one on the spar deck, to be used regularly, and the other on the gun-deck, to be used during action.

Prirectly in front of the wheel is the pilet or will leave for the South.

Directly in front of the wheel is the pilot or look-out house, which is constructed of iron plates six inches in thickness on the gundeck, and nine inches above the spardeck. A windplates six inches in thickness on the gundeck, and nine inches above the spardeck. A winding staircase leads to the upper portion, where the captain takes his sound and marks and points out the motion of the vessel during the contest, and also directs the firing. This structure is round, so that if a shot should strike it, it would glance of. For a vessel of the weight and size of the Ironsides the engine and bollers are surprisingly small. Everything is carried on with the greatest precision in the mechanical department. The armament consists of fourteen it-inch Dahlgreen guns, and two 900 pound rified Parrot guns. These are on the gundeck. On the spar-deck two smaller Dahlgreen guas are giaced, one at the bow and one at the stern.

MARPER'S PERRY BESTEGED.

PREDERICE, Monday, 2 p. m.—The news that reaches here from the front, soming through a variety of sources, and of course only to be got together plecement, is all of a gloriously encouraging character. Our troops have been driving the enemy ever since they left Frederick, and yesterday fought them for four hours in a general engagement, defeated them, and sent them Sying in reput retreat to get ont of "My Maryima". Our army has proved fiself the that god of the ancient mythology who gained strength from contact with his mother earth, and rises from a fall prepared with a new fand of resolution and stamina. The reverses in front of Washington left behind, in the minds of men, anger instead of dismay; and led by Generals in whom they place confidence, they say they are "fighting this time to win," and so far have made their words good by acts.

Sunday is emphatically the fighting day of this war, and yesterday has added another to the list of memorable battles that have occurred on it. The scene of the fight yesterday was upon what is generally called the "Second Mountain" of the Catoctin range, but on the maps it is called South Mountain. Our forces McDowell's) particularly distinguished them-

Gen. Hooker in advance, with Gen. Franklin on the left, and Gen. Burnside's corps in the center. Gen. Heintzelman's corps was pressing up in the rear, and was I believe in reserve. When the enemy were thus found drawn up and back and forward, with irresistible fury Our artillery was brought speedily up, and played its part, as usual, well. For two hours artillery continued, until the enemy began to show signs of wavering. Our extreme right had been gradualty but surely pushing the enemy, crowding him toward the Gap, and threatening his flank. At 5 o'clock a general charge was ordered, and our men, responding willingly and bravely to the call, sprang for-

put an end to the centest. THE BATTLE PIELD. Our army bivouacked for the night on the bat-they had been punished.

Our own loss, it is believed, is very much Our own loss, it is believed, is very much less—perhaps not half that of the enemy. Our men fought the whole day with that desperate valor which in battle often proves that there is safety in temerity. They literally drove the enemy all the time, giving them no time to rally, no opportunity to recover, and thus kept them at a disadvantage. Our veterans have added new laurels to those gained on other well-fought fields, whilst the new regiments did better than any one would have ventured.

which they went under fire. which they went under fire.

Among our losses we have to lament that of Gen. Reno, one of General Reno accompanied the Hatteras expedition, and bore an important part in all the battles from Rosnoke Island to Newbern. He was a brave, enterprising and reliable officer. I do not know the particulars of his death, but understand that he was killed to a reflected while feeling the position of the

New works are now established, and the sup-ply will bereafter be regular. It is a gratifying indication of the times that so many branches of trade derive profitable support from the war which prostrates the great commercial interest. The war is there-fore not wholly an evil, uside from the great questions of principle which are involved in it; nor does it entail upon our people that universal and ruinous depression and misery which the faint-hearted predicted as its immediate result. Our great merchants, who can bear distress better than any other class of our citizens, do not murtuur at the transfer of comparative prosperity to the ranks of the trades, for the latter have always inferior resources,
